Lack of tolerating MHC-bound peptides for in vivo induction of tolerance to islet beta-cell antigens. Islet antigens are predominantly presented by MHC class II molecules to CD4+ T cells. In addition to the restricted antigen recognition by T cells, MHC restriction also has a fundamental role in T-cell tolerance induction. Immunodominant islet beta-cell antigens, glutamic acid decarboxylase (GAD65) and tyrosine phosphatase, insulinoma-associated protein-2 (IA-2), have been proposed to be involved in the failure to induce islet tolerance to allogeneic islet transplants. Evidence has been presented that these antigens are presented in an MHC-restricted fashion. Here we investigated whether MHC-restricted presentation was required for tolerance induction of T cells to islet beta-cell antigens. Several adenoviral vectors coding for GAD65 or IA-2 were constructed. In a GAD65 vaccination model, where GAD65-specific T cells were tested in vitro, tolerization was observed for both GAD65 and its dominant epitopes in transduced islets. In contrast, in an in vivo islet transplantation model, where GAD65- or IA-2-specific T cells were in place, islet graft survival was unaffected. To explain the discrepancy, the possible role of CD4+ T-cell-mediated cytolytic mechanisms was studied, but the results showed that the islet graft is not susceptible to CD4+ T-cell-mediated elimination. It is concluded that tolerance induction to islet beta-cell antigens is not dependent on their MHC-restricted presentation, and that the failure of tolerance induction cannot be explained by CD4+ T cells.Q: WPF change the background color of button after it is clicked I am working on a WPF project where I need to make my background color of button change after it is clicked.
